Bouguereau was born in La Rochelle, France, in 1825. He studied art at the Académie des Beaux-Arts in Paris, where he was a student of François-Édouard Picot. After graduating from the Académie, Bouguereau began his career as a painter of religious and historical subjects. However, he soon found greater success with his paintings of women and children.

Bouguereau's paintings of women and children are typically idealized images of beauty and innocence. His subjects are often depicted in idyllic settings, surrounded by flowers and other natural elements. Bouguereau's paintings are also known for their attention to detail, and his figures are often rendered with great precision.

Bouguereau's work was immensely popular during his lifetime. He was awarded numerous medals and honors, and his paintings were sold to collectors around the world. Bouguereau's work was also reproduced in popular magazines and prints, which helped to spread his fame even further.

Bouguereau died in La Rochelle in 1905. He was 80 years old. Today, his work is still admired for its beauty and technical skill. His paintings are represented in major museums around the world, including the Louvre Museum in Paris and the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City.
