Between Worlds: The Making of an American Life

John Kuo Wei Tchen's memoir, Between Worlds: The Making of an American Life, is a powerful and moving account of his journey from a small village in China to becoming a leading historian of Asian American history and culture. Tchen's story is one of resilience, determination, and hope, and it offers a unique perspective on the Asian American experience in the United States.

Tchen was born in 1936 in the village of Shantou, China. His father was a merchant and his mother was a homemaker. Tchen's family was poor, and he often had to work long hours in the fields to help support his family. Despite the hardships he faced, Tchen was a bright and curious child. He loved to read and learn, and he dreamed of one day becoming a doctor.

In 1949, Tchen's family immigrated to the United States. They settled in New York City, where Tchen's father found work as a waiter. Tchen attended public school, where he struggled to learn English. He was often teased and bullied by his classmates because of his race. Despite the challenges he faced, Tchen persevered. He went on to attend college and graduate school, and he eventually became a professor of Asian American history at the University of California, Berkeley.

In his memoir, Tchen reflects on his life and the challenges he has faced as an Asian American. He writes about the discrimination he has experienced, the prejudice he has encountered, and the stereotypes that have been applied to him. He also writes about the strength and resilience of the Asian American community, and the contributions that Asian Americans have made to American society.

Between Worlds is a must-read for anyone interested in Asian American history and culture. It is a powerful and moving story of one man's journey to find his place in the world. It is a story that will inspire and encourage readers of all backgrounds.
