The History of the Bluewater Walkabout

The Bluewater Walkabout was conceived by Australian adventurer John Pilger in 1983. Pilger was inspired by the writings of Thor Heyerdahl, who had sailed across the Pacific Ocean on a raft in 1947. Pilger believed that a similar journey could be undertaken by foot, and he set out to prove it.

The Bluewater Walkabout began in 1983 in Panama. Pilger and his team traveled by foot, boat, and plane, following the Pacific Ocean from the Americas to Asia. They crossed the Andes Mountains, sailed across the Pacific Ocean, and trekked through the jungles of Southeast Asia. The journey took over 10 years to complete, and it covered over 25,000 miles.

The Bluewater Walkabout was a challenging journey, but it was also a rewarding one. Pilger and his team gained a deep understanding of the Pacific region. They met with indigenous peoples, scientists, and government officials. They witnessed the effects of climate change and pollution. And they gained a deep appreciation for the beauty and diversity of the Pacific Ocean.
