Part memoir, part social commentary, The Mother of Black Hollywood is a must-read for anyone interested in the history of show business or the story of a true trailblazer. Lewis has been a force in Hollywood for over four decades, and her memoir is a fascinating look at the challenges and triumphs she has faced along the way.

Lewis was born in Louisville, Kentucky, in 1957. She grew up in a poor family, and her early life was marked by violence and abuse. But Lewis found solace in music and acting, and she eventually landed a scholarship to the prestigious Juilliard School. After graduating from Juilliard, Lewis moved to New York City to pursue her acting career. She landed her first big break in the 1981 Broadway musical Dreamgirls, and she went on to star in a number of films and television shows, including Beaches, Sister Act, and The Fresh Prince of Bel-Air.

In her memoir, Lewis talks about her struggles with racism and sexism in Hollywood. She also discusses her battles with addiction and depression. But through it all, she has always remained true to herself and her art. Lewis is a gifted storyteller, and her memoir is a powerful and inspiring read. It is a story of resilience, triumph, and the power of dreams.
